SUDAN: The trial of the Khartoum terrorists has been further delayed by the appointment of non-Sudanese Arab lawyers to assist in the defense.

The pre-trial prosecution proceedings, which were to begin this week, have been postponed, and no new date has been set. The newly appointed members of the defense team must now meet with the accused. Sudanese law restricts their role to that of consultants. The participation of the Arab lawyers, however, does allow President Numayri to demonstrate that Sudan is taking every precaution to ensure a fair trial. Numayri will be hard pressed to conclude the proceedings in a manner acceptable to both the Arab states and the US and at the same time to avoid provoking a terrorist retaliation.
